"Blowin' in the Wind" was written by Bob Dylan and released in 1962. It became an anti-war protest song and is still widely performed and recorded. The song's lyrics are often interpreted as a call for justice and understanding. The words include:

"Blowin' in the wind, blowin' in the wind
What's happening, world
Tell me, tell me what's happening
I can't find no peace, no peace for me
I hear the wind blowin' in the trees
Tell me, tell me what's happening
I can't find no peace, no peace for me"

The song has been covered by numerous artists and has been featured in films, television shows, and commercials. It has been cited as an influence on many other protest songs. The song's simplicity and accessibility have made it a favorite among performers and listeners alike.

In recent years, the song has been performed at various protests against war and injustice. It continues to resonate with audiences around the world as a symbol of hope and change.
